2.1 APPLYING A POLITICAL LENS TO POPULAR CULTURE IN 'POST-TROUBLES' NORTHERN IRELAND

Popular culture tends to fall outside the analytical scope of the Peace and Conflict Studies sub-field of the discipline of Political Science. In response, the current panel seeks to apply a specifically political analysis to popular culture in post-Troubles Northern Ireland in order to trace the continuities and discontinuities of the still-recent past to the present. Forms of popular cultural expression are explored as phenomena that both reflect, and shape, the political landscape – and thus possess the potential to both inhibit or facilitate movement towards peace and reconciliation.

5.4 PEACE & CONFLICT SPECIALIST GROUP PANEL I

Northern Ireland’s Troubled Past: New Historical Departures

The continued release of official and unofficial archives in the United Kingdom and Republic of Ireland gives historians the opportunity to explore how influential decisions were made during the Northern Ireland ‘troubles’. Indeed, it is now possible to take stock of important events between the years of British Army deployment in 1969 and the 1981 Hunger Strike thanks in part to the ‘30 year rule’. This panel will address some of the key political and military factors during this period – from the politics of military intervention under Labour and Conservative governments to the secret dialogue between the British state and loyalists and republicans – by analysing the newly-released archives and underutilised eyewitness testimonies.

7.4 PEACE RESEARCH ROUNDTABLE

The Public Contribution of Academic Research to Transitions from Conflict

Room: Corinthian 1

Chair: Dr. Niall Ó Dochartaigh, NUI Galway

Discussant: Dr. Katy Hayward, Queen's University Belfast

This roundtable has been convened in response to a growing awareness in the field of Peace Research of the public contribution to be made by academic research in a context of transition from conflict. Its reach extends far beyond Higher Education's current focus on research 'impact', into the wider long-standing debate about the public value of knowledge and the normative/moral dimensions of policy-relevant, publicly-engaged research. The purpose of the roundtable is to create a forum for exchange of ideas among experienced researchers whose work has had a crucial connection to social change and transitions from conflict, be it through public policy, institutional adjustment, local community development or key individuals in Northern Ireland's peace process. It also includes participants from outside the academic field who have drawn upon primary research in their own public roles in the process of change in Northern Ireland. The roundtable will open up with brief 5 minute contributions by participants outlining/reflecting on their own experience and will then centre around specified questions for discussion, such as (a) access to groups, (b) briefings to such groups on the results, (c) ethical issues and (d) dealing with the media. The remainder of the session will be dedicated to an open discussion involving questions from the audience.

Participants:

Dr. Anna Bryson, Queen Mary, University of London; Paul O'Connor, The Pat Finucane Centre; Prof. Jon Tonge, University of Liverpool; Kate Turner, Healing Through Remembering; Sara Templer (Victims' Service)

8.2 REASSESSING THE NORTHERN IRELAND PEACE PROCESS

Room: Amelia

Chair: Prof. Timothy White, Xavier University

With the bedding down of new institutions of government for Northern Ireland in recent years the Irish peace process has reached a dénouement of sorts. Now that there is greater clarity around the trajectory that key actors were following during the process we are in a much better position to understand their actions during that process. This panel examines the tangled web of interactions and relationships that characterised the genesis of the peace process in the first half of the 1990s. It offers a new analysis of the peace process through an examination of British policy, Republican strategy and the complex relationships between the multiple channels of communication that linked the Irish government, unionists, the SDLP, loyalists, republicans and the British government in varying configurations. It offers both academic and personal perspectives on the process through the participation of Shauna Duddy, daughter of key intermediary Brendan Duddy and Eamonn Downey who initially catalogued and compiled his private papers.

Can International Lessons be Learned from the Northern Ireland Conflict? A View from the Grassroots

Room: Corinthian 1

Chair: Prof. Paul Arthur, University of Ulster

Discussant: Dr. Aaron Edwards, Royal Military Academy, Sandhurst

- Jon McCourt, Peace and Reconciliation Group, Derry
Jon McCourt grew up in Derry. He marched for civil rights in 1968, and joined the IRA in 1969. He left in the mid 1970s, feeling disillusioned that it had moved too far from the civil rights agenda and was contributing to increased polarisation and sectarianism. He then became a community peace activist, and has worked in the area ever since, including working with victims of violence, community relations and youth in criminalised areas. He has had extensive experience of interacting in international peace-building initiatives. Jon sits on the Management Board of the Peace and Reconciliation Group.
- Nigel Gardiner, EPIC North Ulster/Deputy Leader of the Progressive Unionist Party
Nigel Gardiner has worked as a community leader in the Bonds Street/Irish Street area of Londonderry for many years. A former member of the Ulster Defence Regiment, once the largest infantry regiment in the British Army, Nigel has been working as a community relations practitioner for over a decade. He is currently a project coordinator at EPIC North Ulster, which works with former prisoners from the Ulster Volunteer Force and Red Hand Commando groups, helping them to integrate into the community and seek employment. Nigel was elected Deputy Leader of the Progressive Unionist Party at the party's annual conference in 2010 and is the PUP's representative for Londonderry and the North-West. Nigel has had extensive experience of participating in local and international peace-building initiatives.

SESSION 9: 5.30-6.30 PLENARY II: INAUGURAL PETER MAIR MEMORIAL LECTURE
Room: Corinthian 1
Title: Going, going... gone. The end of party democracy as we know it?
Speaker: Prof. Ingrid van Biezen
Professor of Comparative Politics, Leiden University
Introduction: Prof. Gary Murphy, Dublin City University, PSAI President

The Peter Mair Memorial Lecture was established in 2011 in honour of the late Prof. Peter Mair, Chair of Comparative Politics and Government at the European University Institute, Florence and one of Ireland's leading political scientists. 'A native of Sligo and a graduate of University College Dublin, Prof. Mair had a distinguished academic career and was the author of a number of books on Irish and international politics. Following his graduation from UCD with an MA in politics in 1974 Prof. Mair began his career as an assistant professor at the University of Limerick. He subsequently lectured at the universities of Strathclyde and Manchester before moving to the European University Institute of Florence. He moved to the University of Leiden in the Netherlands in 1987 and was appointed professor of comparative politics in 1994. In 2005 he returned to Florence and was appointed head of the department of political and social sciences in 2007. Prof. Mair specialised in the study of party and party systems and has written a number of books on the subject. He was co-author of Representative Government in Modern Europe, the fifth edition of which was published in 2011. He was also co-author of Identity, Competition and Electoral Availability, which was awarded the ISSC-UNESCO Stein Rokkan prize.' (The Irish Times, 17 August 2011)

Prof. Dr. Ingrid van Biezen is professor of Comparative Politics. She studied at Leiden University, from which she also received her PhD. She has subsequently worked at the University of Birmingham and has been a visiting professor at the Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore and a research fellow at Yale University and the University of California, Irvine. Her research interests lie primarily in the field of comparative politics, political parties and party systems, and democratisation and institutional development. Her current research concentrates primarily on the various empirical and normative dimensions of party regulation and its implications for modern party democracy. In this context, she currently directs a large-scale research project Re-conceptualising democracy, funded by the European Research Council.
